

Michael Strano

Charles and Hilda Roddey Associate Professor of Chemical Engineering

Radical Detection Using Nanotechnology

Abstract

Intra- and inter-cellular signaling pathways often involve chemical fluxes that are too small to detect using conventional assays and instrumentation. The Strano laboratory designs and synthesizes fluorescent nanosensors capable of listening to these signals, even at the single molecule level. Our work focuses on the synthesis and mathematical analysis of these analytical platforms to solve biological problems.